Nicholas Choroier is not your usual photographer. He is a kite aerial photographer. He uses a kite to hoist his camera in to the skies and clicks photographs while the camera dangles precariously mid-air. As a teenager, Nicholas has two passions- photography and kite flying. During a trip to India to make a photo report on kite making, he learnt about this unique style of photography. Fascinated, he literally tied his two hobbies together for a living. Nicholas learnt to make strong kites modeled on the Japanese kites, Rokkaku that could endure harsh winds. A novice in his chosen field, he then set out to train himself. Today he is one of the most well-known kite aerial photographers in the world. The technique is to tie a cradle containing the photography equipment to the string of the kite and then fly it, thus lurching the camera in to air. From the ground Nicholas manipulates the angles of the camera with a remote. An air to ground video link enables him to see the view from the kite's vantage point. Once satisfied with the frame, he clicks a picture. However, the job does have its pitfalls too. Once, his kite disappeared in the Yamuna river, with his expensive camera in tow. He is a specially fond of India, having made a couple of trips and taken many spectacular photos. "India is too vast and beautiful country to be captured through the lenses in one life" he says. He recently released a book, Kite's Eye View: India between earth and sky. Though it includes photographs of off taken sites like the Taj Mahal, It shows them from a totally different perspective.

Questions:

1. What were Nicholas's two passions?
2. How does Nicholas take aerial photographs?
3. What is Rokkaku?
4. What risks do aerial photographers face?
5. What does Nicholas say about the beauty of India?
